廠織絨利溥

PU LI WOOLEN MILLS

Location: Tsinghochon (Chingho), on the Peking-Kalgan Ry., 6 miles north of Peking. Capital Cost: Tls. 480,000 up to May, 1909. Established: 1908; re-organized, 1915. Operated by the Board of Military Affairs of the Chinese Army. General Manager: Lieut.-Gen. Lo Sung. Equipment: 36 looms from Leeds; about 100 Singer sewing machines in the tailoring department; scouring machines, driers, oilers, willeys, dreadnaughts, carders, milling machines, and machines for finishing, raising, brushing, cutting, and pressing, all from Huddersfield; 1 B. & W. boiler, 1,619 sq. ft. h.s. The machinery was set up by an expert brought from England. In addition to carding, spinning, and weaving departments, there is a department for finishing and dyeing. The mills were equipped for the complete process of woolen manufacture, from the time the unscoured wool is delivered at the factory to the finished products. The buildings, erected by an English company, cover about 4 acres, and are constructed of native brick, with steel-trussed roofs and cement floors. They are practically fire-proof. Output: The mills were established for the purpose of producing woolens for heavy winter uniforms and goods, weighing 3 lbs. to the yard, for overcoats, and still heavier goods for blankets. The 36 looms each had a capacity of 40 yds. per day of 10 hrs. The original program has been changed and according to the latest report (September, 1922) the principal products were plain and colored felts, carpets, etc. In recent years the mills have suffered from mis-management and have been closed part of the time. In spite of the cheapness of the raw material, it is said that the total cost of the production of goods at the Pu Li mills exceeds the prices at which the same goods might be obtained from abroad. It is to be observed in this connection, however, that the mills were erected partly as an experimental station and as an industrial training school for the natives of this great wool producing section of China rather than with the expectation of making them a paying commercial enterprise.
