

TABBY, in commerce, a kind of rich silk which has undergone the operation of tabbying. See the next article.
TABBYING, the passing a silk or stuff under a calender, the rolls of which are made of iron or copper, variously engraven, which bearing unequally on the stuff renders the surface thereof unequal, so as to reflect the rays of light differently, making the representation of waves thereon.